

Does Bluechew work in all cases?

Erectile dysfunction, also known as sexual impotence, can be aggravating, not only for the affected man himself, but also for his partner. The relationship can be significantly affected. For many men, bluechew is therefore the hope of regaining self-confidence and maintaining a satisfying relationship and sex life.

Erectile dysfunction can occur for several reasons. So a very common question is: Does bluechew work in all cases or can the agent lose its effect in some cases?

How does erection work?

To better understand the function and effectiveness of the medication in cases of sexual impotence, it is important to understand how the erection works.

Physical process

The penis, a male sexual organ, has excretory and reproductive functions. In order for it to fulfill its reproductive functions, it is necessary that the organic process called erection takes place and works as follows: inside the penis there are two cylindrical chambers called cavernous bodies that extend throughout the organ. Within these bodies there are two arteries (in addition to surrounding veins) that are able to increase or decrease the blood flow within the penis - the process responsible for the success and maintenance of the erection.

Psychological Process

It can be said that the erection starts in the brain when some sensory stimulus - smell, image, sound, or touch - causes the nervous system to send chemical messages to the genital blood vessels. When this happens, the local arteries relax causing more blood to enter the penis, and the veins close so that the pressure keeps the blood "trapped" inside the corpora cavernosa thus supporting the erection - that is, the erect position of the penis that allows the organ to penetrate vaginally.

Lack of erection

The erectile dysfunction - difficulty or inability to have or maintain an erection - it happens, so when something interferes in the physical or psychological processes described above by preventing blood from flowing as it should into the body, or that there remain.

It is natural that this difficulty sometimes occurs throughout life. But when it becomes frequent, it's time to seek medical help. In the vast majority of cases, the urologist or specialist doctor prescribes a vasodilator medication, such as bluechew.

Main reasons that impact the effect of bluechew

Anxiety

One of the main problems of non-organic origin that interfere with man's sexual performance is anxiety. Again, it is normal for everyone to experience sexual anxiety, but when it becomes recurrent and uncontrollable, it becomes an obstacle to sexual performance by turning something that should be pleasurable into a bad experience.

Some people feel so overwhelmed by anxiety that they simply avoid having sex. Fears about one's appearance, performance, penis size, fear of not meeting the partner's expectations, and relationship difficulties are among the most common fears that cause sexual anxiety.

When it reaches a certain level, anxiety causes the body to enter a way that psychologists call "fight or flight" in which various types of hormones are released causing a great sense of discomfort and fear. In the most severe cases of sexual anxiety, it may be necessary to use specific medications for anxiety in addition to the drug for erectile dysfunction.

Lack of Libido

A fairly common mistake about erectile dysfunction drugs is to think that they increase the user's libido - this is not true.

The bluechew is not a drug developed with the intention of increasing libido - cases of impotence related to lack of libido are usually treated with drugs and other therapeutic monitoring and / or psychiatric.

bluechew does not act, therefore, on users' sexual desire and any report in this regard is nothing more than a placebo effect. Its performance is a dilating vessel and facilitating erection. The man who is under the effect of medication, therefore, will achieve erection much more easily in the face of tactile and visual stimuli.

Other reasons why bluechew may not work

There are many reasons why drugs for erectile dysfunction do not lead to the expected result, and in most cases, ineffectiveness is due to a lack of correct use.

bluechew may not achieve the desired effect when:

- users imagine that the drug will lead to an erection even without sexual stimulation;
- when men who are not in the bluechew precautions group and still take the lowest recommended dose (ideal for most men is to take the intermediate 50 mg dosage);
- when sexual intercourse is attempted immediately after taking the medicine (bluechew takes up to an hour to take effect in most men);
- when the medication is withdrawn (the medication may not work on the first attempt, so it is recommended that at least 6 attempts be made before assuming that the medication does not work).

What to do if the medicine does not work?

If even with all these precautions the medication does not work, then it is possible that your case of dysfunction may require interventions of another type.

Erectile dysfunction medications resolve more than 80% of cases. It is estimated, for example, that bluechew is the sixth best-selling medication in the world in recent years due to its high level of effectiveness, in cases of erectile dysfunction of different origins and levels. However, when they do not show results, doctors usually suggest:

- 1) injectable drugs, which are recommended for men with erectile problems due to diabetes or for those who have completely removed the prostate due to cancer or other health problem - that is, cases in which there are no problems with the mechanisms erection, but with the nerves of the organ that cannot successfully transmit the stimulus. In this case the drug is injected directly into the genital;

- 2) penile prostheses (also called implants) that can be of two types: inflatable, or silicone. Both types consist of the implantation of a mechanism inside the penis that does not impair neither the sensitivity nor the ejaculation capacity. Silicone ones are preferable because they are cheaper and longer lasting, but inflatable ones have a more "natural and organic" appearance to the erection.
